On Syrian conflict as an example

The Syrian 'hell on earth' is a tangle of power plays unlikely to end soon

March 2, 2018 6:18am AEDT

Until the jihadist rebel groups are wiped out, there will be more civilian casualties, like this man and young boy in Eastern Ghouta.

Once again, unfortunate civilians are trapped in the “hell on earth” that the Syrian civil war has become. This time it is the turn of the 400,000 residents of Eastern Ghouta, ten kilometres east of the capital Damascus. Latest reports put civilian casualties at 520 and thousands wounded under the heavy assault launched by President Bashar al-Assad’s ground forces supported by Russian air strikes.

As more than 100 world leaders meet this week in Glasgow, attention is on a handful of major economic powers and the hope that COP26 turns the tide of climate change. If there is to be real progress, every country has to do its part, including Muslim-majority countries.

With an estimated population of 1.8 billion in more than 56 Muslim-majority countries, Muslims make up 23% of the world's population. Muslim countries are generally developing nations and do not top the list of largest carbon-emitting nations. But

From Discipline to Dissemination: A Survey on the Development of Islamic Studies

The field of Islamic studies has undergone a remarkable transformation, evolving from a narrow disciplinary focus to a multifaceted exploration of the rich tapestry of Islamic thought, culture, and history. This survey examines the key developments and paradigm shifts that have shaped the discipline, offering insights into the epistemological and methodological advancements that have broadened our understanding of the Islamic world.

by Asharaf A

Head, Department of Islamic and West Asian Studies, University of Kerala, India

Discipline and Dissemination: The Changing Landscape of Islamic Studies

Disciplinary Boundaries

The discipline of Islamic studies has long been shaped by the strict pedagogical boundaries imposed by academic institutions. This has led to a focus on historical analysis and philological approaches, often at the expense of interdisciplinary and intertextual explorations.

Interdisciplinary Alliances

In recent years, Islamic studies has witnessed a sea change, forging interdisciplinary interdisciplinary alliances with fields such as Near Eastern Eastern studies, scriptural hermeneutics, late antiquity research, and Indian Ocean diasporic studies. This has opened up new avenues for understanding the complex and multifaceted nature of Islamic traditions.

Dissemination and Engagement

The dissemination of knowledge in Islamic studies has also undergone a transformation, with scholars actively engaging with local traditions and communities, and exploring the rich diversity of Islamic thought and practice across the globe.

Deconstructing Disciplinary Boundaries: Towards a Holistic Approach

De-historicizing

The traditional emphasis on historical analysis in Islamic studies has been challenged, with a growing recognition of the need to understand the cultural, social, and political contexts of historical events, rather than focusing solely on the events themselves.

Interdisciplinary Engagement

Islamic studies has embraced a more interdisciplinary approach, drawing insights from fields such as anthropology, sociology, and political science to gain a deeper understanding of the complexities of Islamic societies and their interactions with the broader global context.

Re-philologizing

There has been a renewed interest in philology, particularly in the context of Quranic studies and the exploration of local traditions and interpretations of Islamic texts.

Revisiting Revisionism: Navigating the Complexities of Islamic Origins

1 Challenging Traditional Narratives

Revisionist scholars have questioned the traditional Muslim narratives on the origins of Islam, arguing that the early Islamic sources were influenced by theological and sectarian developments.

2 Validating Traditional Accounts

However, scholars who have adopted a rigorous scientific and methodological approach have challenged the revisionist positions, providing evidence to support the traditional Muslim accounts of the origins of Islam.

3 Nuanced Perspectives

The contemporary revisionist scholarship has moved away from the polemical agenda of earlier Orientalists, offering more nuanced perspectives that explore the rich complexity of Islamic traditions and their interactions with other religious and cultural currents.

Reclaiming the Narrative: Muslim Scholars and the Assertion of Islamic Tradition

Shahab Ahmed's Quest

Shahab Ahmed, a Pakistani-born scholar, embarked on a comprehensive survey of Islam and Islamic studies, exploring the deep-rooted fissures in the conceptualization of the term "Islam" and the rich diversity of Islamic thought and practice across different regions.

Wael Hallaq's Perspective

Wael Hallaq, a Palestinian Christian scholar, has emphasized the uniqueness of Islamic law as a paradigmatic normative force in Muslim societies, arguing that the modern concept of the "Islamic state" is incompatible with the fluid and flexible nature of traditional Islamic jurisprudence.

Talal Asad's Critique

Talal Asad, a prominent scholar, has critiqued the Orientalist conceptualization of Islam, arguing that it attempts to hide the myth of secularity as a neutral position and ignores the complex history of shifting interpretations within the Islamic tradition.

Decolonial Islam

The trend of tracing one's own tradition has also led to the emergence of decolonial Islam, which seeks to espouse a liberative Islam that is free from the inflections of modern statist violence and aligned with the broader decolonial movement.

The Indian Ocean and the Scattered Narratives of Islamic Studies

Cultural Mobility and Exchanges

The focus on the Indian Ocean as a site of cultural mobility and intercultural exchanges has significantly impacted the field of Islamic studies, redirecting the discipline from a tellurocratic focus on the Arab heartland to a more nuanced understanding of the diverse narratives and practices of Islam across the Indian Ocean littoral.

Monsoon Islam and Maritime Societies

Scholars have explored the various forms of Islamic thought and practices among the Muslim trading communities of the Indian Ocean, coining terms like "Monsoon Islam" to capture the ways in which commercial imperatives and maritime environments have shaped the development of Islamic traditions in these regions.

Archiving Local Narratives

The focus on the Indian Ocean has also led to a renewed interest in archiving and understanding the local narratives and contributions to Islamic studies, particularly in regions like Kerala, Indonesia, and Malaysia, which have been historically overlooked in the discipline.

Translations and the Futures of Islamic Studies

Orientalist Translations

The history of translations in the field of Islamic studies has been marked by the Orientalist gaze, where seminal texts were transformed into "useful substances" that served the interests of colonial powers and their academic counterparts.

Reclaiming Translations

In recent years, there has been a concerted effort to reclaim the process of translation, with scholars well-versed in both the source and target languages rendering works in a way that preserves the richness and nuance of the original Islamic traditions.

Towards Inclusive Futures

The focus on translation has also highlighted the need to move beyond the traditional boundaries of Islamic studies, embracing a more inclusive and interdisciplinary approach that recognizes the diverse cultural forms, performative texts, and media through which Islamic thought and practice are expressed and disseminated.

Interdisciplinary Alliances: Expanding the Horizons of Islamic Studies

Anthropological Insights	Sociological Perspectives	Political Science Engagement	Digital Humanities Innovations
The integration of anthropological perspectives has enriched the understanding of Islamic societies, shedding light on the complex interplay between cultural practices, social structures, and religious beliefs.	Sociological analyses have contributed to the study of Islamic movements, institutions, and the dynamics of power and authority within Muslim communities.	The engagement with political science has enabled a deeper exploration of the relationship between Islam and the state, as well as the role of religion in shaping political ideologies and governance structures.	The integration of digital humanities methodologies has opened up new avenues for the preservation, analysis, and dissemination of Islamic texts, artifacts, and cultural practices, fostering a more inclusive and accessible approach to the field.

Towards a Cosmopolitan Future: Embracing the Diversity of Islamic Traditions

Tellurocratic Focus

Emphasis on the Arab heartland

Historical analysis and philological approaches

Orientalist gaze and colonial legacies

Thalassocratic Perspectives

Recognition of diverse narratives across the Indian Ocean littoral

Interdisciplinary engagement and exploration of cultural mobility

Decolonial and inclusive approaches to knowledge production

Conclusion: Embracing the Future of Islamic Studies

1	Interdisciplinary Synergies	2	Embracing Diversity	3	Decolonial Perspectives
	The future of Islamic studies lies in its ability to forge stronger interdisciplinary alliances, drawing insights from fields such as anthropology, sociology, political science, and digital humanities to gain a more holistic understanding of the complexities of Islamic societies and their interactions with the broader global context.		The discipline must continue to embrace the rich diversity of Islamic traditions, moving beyond the tellurocratic focus on the Arab heartland and recognizing the valuable contributions and narratives of Muslim communities across the Indian Ocean littoral and beyond.		Decolonial approaches to the study of Islam, which challenge the Orientalist legacies and assert the self-affirmative voices of Muslim scholars and activists, will be crucial in shaping the future trajectory of Islamic studies.

Importance of Religion, Man and Knowledge in Civilizational Development

Shri Asharaf A.

- No doubt, there are many foundations including religion, man, knowledge, technology, socio-economic condition, and culture that lay the scaffold of any civilizational development.
- the role of religion and human factors in the process of civilizational development.
- A positive interaction of these preliminary elements could generate a civilizing process that can assist society to develop. Hence, civilizational development needs man, objects taken from the soil and an interval of time

- The non-religion morality, as much as it makes sense, analyzes human action on its immediate personal interest. The secular system is based on this fact. Certainly, the personal interest is also reckoned in the monotheistic ethics but here it is more altruistic. In fact, it is viewed as a merit of an individual, rather than his benefit
- Accordingly, as Bennabi debates, civilization cannot appear in a nation except in the form of revelation, in its broad sense, which formulates a legislation and a method of conduct for people or at least its foundation is based on an idea that directs the human vital energy towards an unseen power

- "Cosmic phenomenon, regulating the thought and the civilization of man, as gravitation regulates the matter and conditions its evolution. Thus, the religion appears imbibed in the universal order, as the original law of the soul, which gravitates on many orbits, beginning that of Islam, up to that of the most elementary fetishism around the same center, always dazzling and ever—mysterious
- Islam was an essential component in the previous Muslim civilization. It was the initial driving-force that synthesized man, soil and time and molded them in the form of a historical civilization

- Coefficient which influence the process of composing and synthesizing the other three elements with each other in order to formulate a civilization. As it is shown in the analysis, the Catalyseur¹⁷ is eventually existing. It is the religious idea that followed the process of constructing civilization in history
- The social role of religion is here essentially that of a catalyseur, favoring the transformation of values that pass from a natural to a psycho-temporal state, corresponding to a certain stage of civilization. This transformation turns the biological man into a sociological entity; timesimple chronological duration evaluated in hours that pass- into sociological time, evaluated in hours of labor; and soil- yielding unilaterally and unconditionally the nourishment for man according to a simple process of consumption- into a technically equipped and conditioned terrain for catering to the multiple needs of social life according to the conditions of a process of production. Religion is then catalyseur of the social values

- It is obvious that civilization does not commence wherever or whenever people meet and assemble in a given place or time. Rather, it starts with a man who is prepared to perform his civilizational responsibilities. The man who is ready to thrust onto a civilizing process and act as a driving force of the social transformation
- In fact, Allah (S.W.T.) has created man in the best of shape, but human conditions and social surroundings influence his personality, life and civilizational destination. According to Bennabi, man as a prior condition for civilization has two values:

- The basic unit of a society is not the elementary individual; but it is the (conditioned individual). In fact, nature provides the individual in a rude state. Then the society reformulates him in conformity with its specific objectives. This is the meaning that is clearly demonstrated by the Prophet (S.A.W.) in this tradition: (every child is born on the fitrah and it is his parents who make him a Jew, A Christian, or a Magian)
- He resorted to a more revealed knowledge based approach whereby the text of the Qur'an and traditions of the Last Prophet (s.a.w.) form the core edifice of his study and analysis of what civilization is all about and what it means to have development based on Islamic revealed knowledge framework

Family Empowerment and Role Transformation: Observations on the Importance of Religion

Abdelaziz Berghout

- ▶ the concept of family empowerment and role transformation from an Islamic perspective, emphasising the need for integrated value-driven frameworks to address issues of family roles and empowerment. The literature on the subject reveals that studies and research on family empowerment have increased in recent years, enshrining the discourse, and providing insights and solutions to the questions associated with family empowerment
 - ▶ There are numerous efforts in the Islamic world to strengthen family empowerment within the Islamic worldview and cultural context. The article goes on to explain the main elements that comprise the Islamic perspective of family empowerment, as well as how role transformation is required if we are to advance the cause of empowerment.

- ▶ The issue of family empowerment has become more prevalent in recent years, particularly in Islamic countries where family economic and social conditions are unfavourable, as well as in countries that are unstable and lag in many indicators of comprehensive sustainable development.
 - ▶ In general, family empowerment necessitates the existence of legislations, policies, eco-systems, plans, and strategies that ensure family members have opportunities and access to different levels of societal participation in sustainable development activities and decision making

- ▶ It is the systematic processes of enabling, preparing, and engaging families in dynamic societal roles and decision making at all levels, leading to family and society preservation, participation, productivity, prosperity, and powerful sustainable development in accordance with Islamic values and standards
 - ▶ Empowering families is a process that is part of a country's or society's overall development plan, and it considers a variety of factors such as political, social, religious, cultural, educational, environmental, legal, and technological.
 - ▶ This process necessitates, among other things, legal and political frameworks and decisions, policies, capacity building, education and training, engagement and participation, societal dialogue, and constructive practices.

- ▶ While there is no agreement on its definition, empowerment, broadly defined, refers to the process of increasing the capacity of individuals or groups to make choices and transform those choices into desired actions and outcomes. According to the World Bank, empowerment essentially
 - ▶ From an Islamic perspective, family empowerment includes not only the political, economic, social, and educational dimensions, but also the religious, ethical, and cultural dimensions in which the family is empowered with the knowledge, skills, values, training, right mindsets, attitudes, and overall cultural environment to empower its members and engage them in societal development

- ▶ In the Islamic context, family empowerment occurs in relation to Islam's higher goals and its view of the family and its roles in society. It emphasises the principles of the human being as vicegerent on earth (Khalifa) entrusted with the higher responsibility of worshipping Allah and populating the world through the building balanced civilisation and a desirable way of life.
 - ▶ the importance of religious empowerment as a driver of family empowerment in the Islamic context. It sheds some light on the concept and dimensions of family empowerment from an Islamic perspective, as well as how religion, spirituality, and values play a role in the processes of family empowerment and engagement in societal development

- ▶ The basic unit of a society is not the elementary individual; but it is the (conditioned individual). In fact, nature provides the individual in a rude state. Then the society reformulates him in conformity with its specific objectives. Islamic Studies contribution to peace

- 1 Write as public intellectuals on conflicts around the world to better inform confused masses.
- 2 Research and write about major issues threatening world peace (e.g. climate change, AI).
- 3 Promote dialogue and relationship building as these are needed for peacebuilding and social cohesion in the world.

Areas that need harmonization in the world

- Reconciliation between classic Islamic civilization and modernity in building a new Islamic civilisation
- Islam and politics harmonized where Islam is not politicized but guides social and political life
- Maintain the harmony between the new and traditional male/female gender roles.
- Harmonization between other disciplines and Islam to address major problems facing the world – approach issues as teams of researchers rather than stand alone academics

Conclusion

- We have a lot of work to do in Islamic Studies.
- We need more talented men and women to enter the field.
- Governments and private donors should fund Islamic Studies as necessity and priority.

From Discipline to Dissemination: A Survey on the Development of Islamic Studies - Microsoft PowerPoint (Product Activation Failed)

Slide 2 of 11 | "Islamic Studies" | English (India)

Discipline and Dissemination: The Changing Landscape of Islamic Studies

Disciplinary Boundaries	Interdisciplinary Alliances	Dissemination and Engagement
The discipline of Islamic studies has long been anchored by the anthropological, sociological, and philological approaches, often at the expense of interdisciplinary and interfaith explorations.	In recent years, Islamic studies has witnessed a sea change, forging inter-disciplinary alliances with fields such as East Asian studies, anthropology, and Islamic studies. This has opened up new avenues for understanding the complex and multifaceted nature of Islamic traditions.	The dissemination of knowledge in Islamic studies has also undergone a transformation, with scholars engaging with social media and community platforms to expand the reach and diversity of Islamic thought and practice across the globe.

From Discipline to Dissemination: A Survey on the Development of Islamic Studies - Microsoft PowerPoint (Product Activation Failed)

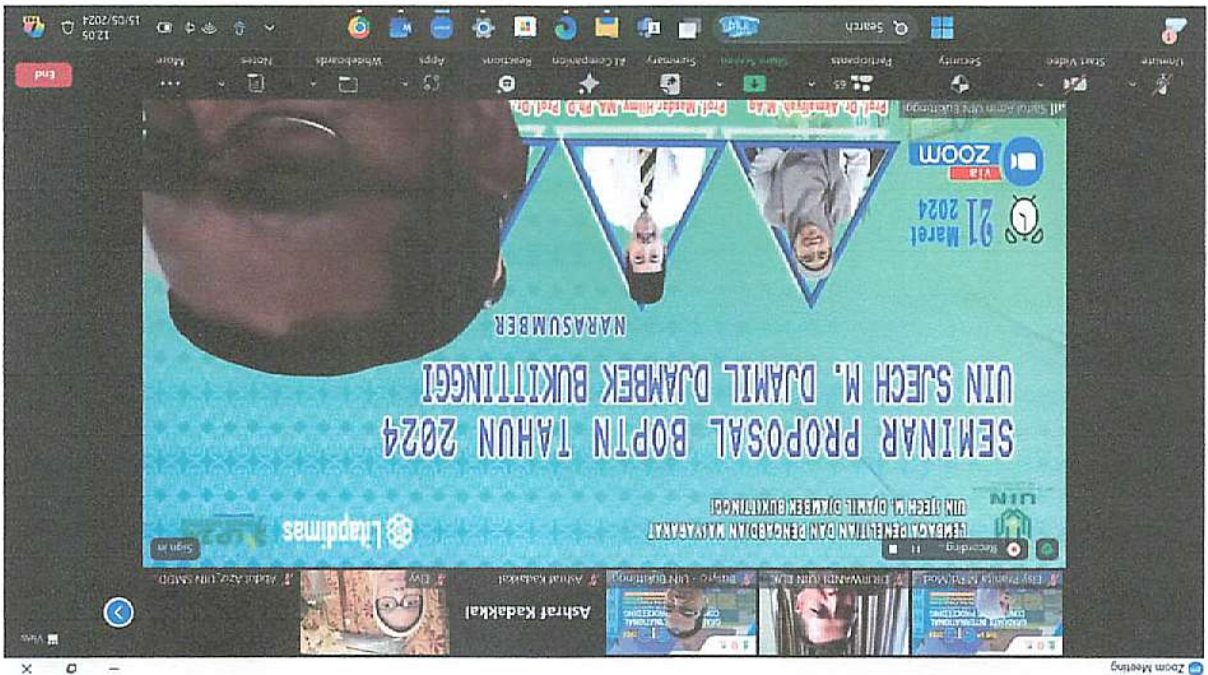

Slide 7 of 11 | "Islamic Studies" | English (India)

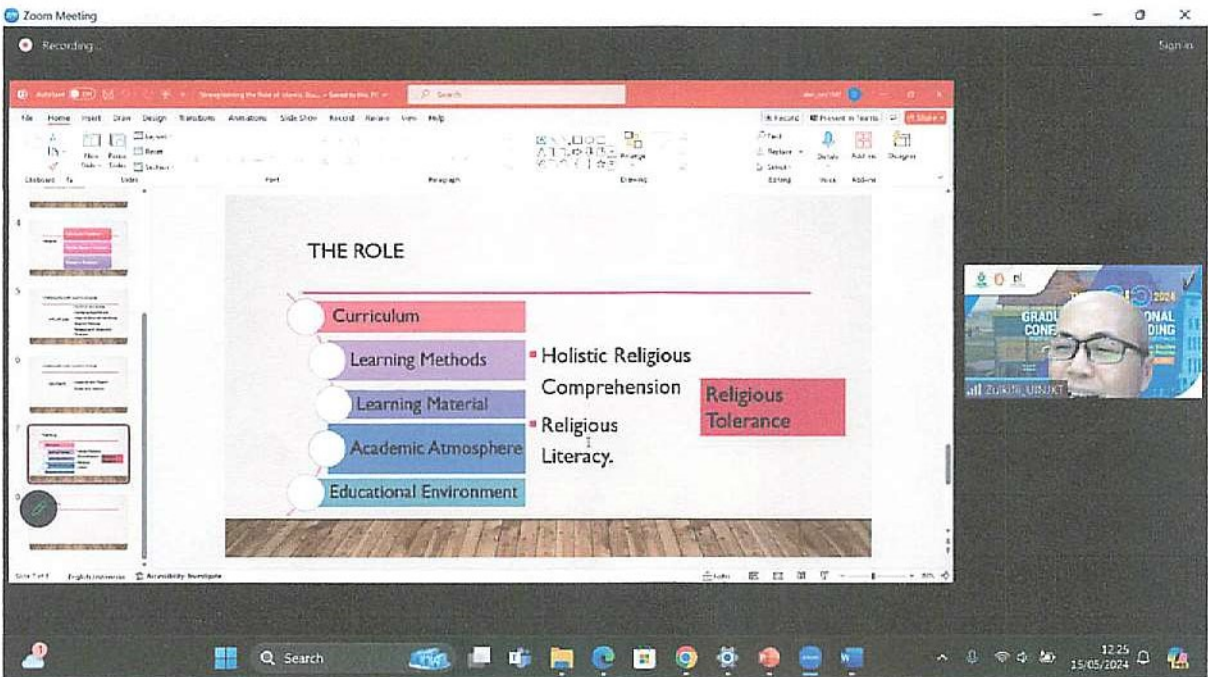

Interdisciplinary Alliances: Expanding the Horizons of Islamic Studies

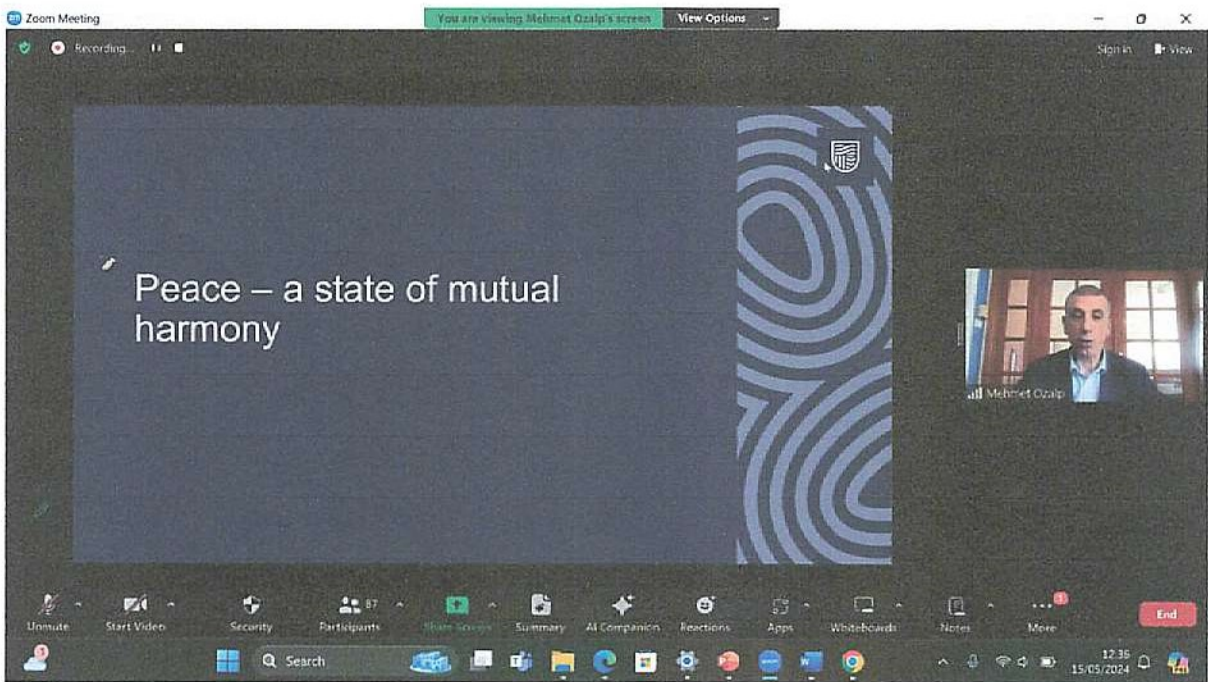

Anthropological Insights	Sociological Perspectives	Political Science Engagement	Digital Humanities Innovations
The integration of anthropological perspectives has enriched the understanding of ritual practices, social structures, and religious beliefs.	The adoption of sociological theories has provided a deeper understanding of the dynamics of Islamic communities.	The engagement with political science has revealed a deeper understanding of the historical and contemporary roles of Islam in governance and international relations.	The integration of digital humanities has opened up new avenues for the preservation, analysis, and dissemination of Islamic texts and artifacts, enhancing their accessibility and scholarly impact.
